Burglary Damage Prevention

Business Inventory Checklist

LATHAM'S STEEL SECURITY DOORSETS

Business inventories are vital when it comes to claiming back losses as a result of commercial theft or burglary. The inventories suggested below are designed to help business owners and floor managers record their stock levels for an accurate record of what has been taken from their premises in the event of a burglary.

Physical Inventory Sheets

These are used to complete a physical count of your business inventory. Across businesses this is called counting, or stock taking. Most retailers are required by tax law to maintain an accurate record of the value of the products in their store (on shelf and in storage).

Inventory Status Sheet

This sheet helps you maintain a current count of your individual items. As a general rule, this inventory status sheet should include:

Q	Item description and unique product number
0	Quantity on hand - the present quantity of this item in your inventory
0	Quantity ordered - the quantity of the item ordered from the supplier
0	Date ordered - the date the item was ordered from the supplier
0	Unit cost - the unit cost of the item per supplier
	Quantity received - the quantity of the item received from the supplier

Inventory Equipment List

Use this form to record your equipment. This form is especially relevant in the context of burglary, but it can also be used to document loss of equipment to other sources, such as fire or flooding.

Date received - the date that you received the item from the vendor

Maintaining this list will enable you to quickly and accurately determine the equipment you have lost from your inventory, and begin the processes of claiming it back on your insurance.

More damaging than burglaries themselves are the impacts that stolen goods have on a business and its ability to trade. By keeping accurate records of your stock and equipment levels, business owners can quickly and clearly demonstrate to their insurance providers what has gone missing, and greatly speed up the insurance claim process.
